CHRISTMAS EVE PALACE CAR

BY ALBION W. TOURGEE. of "A Foot's Errand," "Hot Plough shares," do. [Copyright 1887.]

ward on the Atchison Topeka and Santa Fé,

the line peerless among American rail. road monopolies in the character of its service and evident care for the comfort of its passengers. I have sometimes wondered that other corporations, disturbed by strikes and given to zealous blacklisting of discharged employees, do not take time to inquire into the reason why this great New England system, with its thousands of miles of track spread like a network of steel over the great wheat fields of the Southwest, manages to command such loval and devoted service from that magnificent body of men who compose its army of servitors. The secret is not hard to find to one who will mingle with its employees. learns that these, from brake the Superintendent-and the clerks of the chief offitreated like men and required to show themselves worthy of such treatment by displaying the same paid, well provided, treated with gentle-manly consideration there spirit towards the patrons of the road. Well paid, well provided, treated with gentlemanly consideration, they have developed an esprit de corps which of itself tends to eliminate unworthy elements and has produced a body of subordinate officials unequalled by any which has chanced to fall under my observation. I have made such things a study, and there is hardly a road in the United States upon which I have not had abundant opportunity for pursuing such investigation. Good wages, convenient runs, neat lodging-houses, hospitals for the sick and consideration for the disabled, with rigid discipline and courteous example are at the bottom of this notable result. Courtesy and faithfulness is the rule of the road, and should be engraved on its corporate seal. A bulldozing conductor, an insolent brakeman or a sullen engineer I never yet saw upon the bulldozing conductor, an insolent brakeman or a sullen engineer I never yet saw upon the track. It is characterized by the anxious carefulness of the Boston business man, who-will stop in the busiest hour of the day to mark out the strange wayfarer's course along her crooked streets, modified and broadened by the heartiness and insouciance of the great West. It is said to be grasping and relentless in the assertion of rower learn to take advan-West. It is said to be grasping and relentless in the assertion of power, keen to take advantage of opportunity and a firm believer in the underlying dogma of the railway monopolist, that the tariff rates should be governed by consideration of how much the shipper's business will stand; but these are common infirmities, while its virtues are rare enough to deserve grateful remembrance from those whose comfort they have enhanced. I did not mean to write this, but somehow the time and place where I heard it have become an I place where I heard it have become an ential part of the curious tale I set out to essential part of the curious tale I set out to relate.

We were speeding eastward, as I said, across the plains. We had watched the sun drop down behind the mountains, lighting with his farewell glow the snowy crests long after the plains were covered with gray shadows. Then the stars came out, and the feeling of isolation which the dull, unbroken distance and the great unclouded vault closing evenly down on every side produces exept over us and we drew away from the windows to escape its curious irksomenies. It was Christmas Eve, and a little company, strangers to each other a few hours before, but drawn together by that very sense of isolation which the desert brings, gathered in the smoking saloon. With the freedom which characterizes the great West_we were soon acquainted, and the conversation naturally turned upon the season and the personal experience of the various individuals connected with the Christmas time. There were representatives of almost every part of the country, together with mas time. There were representatives of almost every part of the country, together with some whose memories held quaint pictures of the season of good will in other lands. They was take of lowers and friends and quaint were tales of homes and friends and quaint adventure. There were few silences, for each one's story seemed to awaken an echo in every other mind, and that one who chanced first to begin went on with a new episode of first to begin went on with a new episode of the universal epic.

I must confess that the stories were not many of them of the character of those which have become known in our literature as "Christmas Stories." I do not remember now that there were any acts of notable benevolence recounted, but there were many quaint incidents and some serious adventures. Curiously enough there was no boasting. One told how he had gone a long way, when an awkward lad, to carry a Christmas present to his boy love. She was the daughter of rich parents, and his heart beat furiously at the thought of his presumption, but he trudged on only to find the windows of her father's house all aglow and a gay company gathered within. When he mustered courage to ring the bell and ask for her he was bidden to wait in the hall, where she came to him in the dazzling radiance of her party bad provoked this sally, when the laugh that followed it had subsided, "it may surprise you to have me say so, but I am satisfied that all these stories and traditions of supernatural occurrances on that one night of the year are not altogether without foundation. I am not particularly religious, though I always wish I were about Christmas time, and do not think I am inclined to be superstitious. I have no skill in story-telling, but if you will allow me to relate a little incident, I tnink you will confess that I am not exactly without reason for relate a little incident, I think you will allow me to relate a little incident, I think you will confess that I am not exactly without reason for the belief that I have expressed."

There was a universal murmur of assent. Cigars were relighted, and every one settled himself to hear the stranger's narrative.

"Fore God." said the porter, who was peering in over the heads of those who sat about the door, "I'se gwine ter git away from heah. I don't want ter heah enny mo' ghos' stories dis Chris'mus, no how."

We laughed again as he darted along the passage towards the front of the car. As I was seated on the side next to this passage I soon heard him stealing back, and before the narrator was well started in his story I caught sight of the dusky face peering cautiously in at the door.

"In the winter of 1862," the gentlements.

narrator was well started in his story I caught sight of the dusky face peering cautiously in at the door.

"In the winter of 1862," the gentleman began, "I was one of the line officers of a volunteer regiment in the Army of the Cumberland. The army was lying about Nashville, Tenn., with Bragg some thirty miles away at Murfreesboro. About the 20th of that month our outposts had been pushed forward on the road to Murfreesboro, the right and left a little refused and our rear protected by the Cumberland River. It was pretty generally understood that there would be a fight or a foot-race in the neighborhood of Tullahoma, where the Confederates held a strong position, which was supposed to be well fortified, as, indeed, it would have been had Gen. Bragg learned the lesson he was taught soon after a little earlier. We were about in the centre, and those of us who had gotten over the idea that warfare was a holiday business, as most of us had, for our division was on the left at Perry, ville and was roughly handled there, were beginning to forecast our part in the coming conflict with something like trepidation. On that day I was unexpectedly called upon to act as Assistant Adjutant-General on the staff of the Colonel commanding the brigade, and the next day we received orders to be ready to march without baggage, except two tents for the brigade headquarters. Where we to march without baggage, except two tents for the brigade headquarters. Where we were to go we had no idea—that is the troops had not—the Colonel commanding and his had not—the Colonel commanding and his A. A. G. being the only ones intrusted with that knowledge. In the early morning wa passed through the silent camp to the sleeping city, crossed the river and by sunrise had made a good half-day's march to the south-eastward. The Colonel was proud of the locomotive power of his men and never missed an opportunity to display it. It had snowed all the morning, and what with the cold and the snow and the uncertainty in regard to their destination, the soldiers were in that most unpleasant of all conditions of mind, a mixture of apprehension and discomfort.

comfort.

"Where were we going?' was the universal query. Of course, I pleaded ignorance. The Colonel refused to give information, and nobody else knew.

"As we bore steadily to the nerthward opinions varied as to whether we were sent in pursuit of Morgan, who was threatening our communication, or were to turn the right flank of the enemy. After a little the route became rough and our course changed to dif-ferent points of the compass so often that the speculation upon the subject at length ceased. The enemy seemed to have been in a like quandary respecting our movements, which we suppose was exactly what our command-ing General desired.

On the afternoon of the 23d, after one of ing General desired.

On the afternoon of the 23d, after one of the pleasantest marches a body of troops ever made, though the weather was cold and we had to wade streams where the ice had to be broken, we reached our first halting-place—the banks of a little stream known as Bedsoe's Creek. I was to learn years afterwards the romance which gave it that designation. That day the weather had moderated, the light fall of snow had disappeared and the 24th dawned, as balmy and beautiful a day as a Southern winter sun ever shone upon. Our orders were to remain here until the afternoon of Christmas. We were camped in a splendid position, for the Colonel, though he had been in the service but six months, was a born soldier, and if somewhat reckless in undertaking difficulty was alert and watchful as a lynx. ful as a lynx.
"Of course, marching in light order, our

"Of course, marching in light order, our rations were not over-abundant, nor our bill of fare as varied as it might have been. The old fields about the bivouac were full of game, rabbits and quail. The men used every device to catch the former whenever they could be started within the guard lines, but not with much success. The near approach of Christmas awakened a relish for luxuries as well as softened the hearts of those in authority. On the suggestion of the Quartermaster, it was decided by the Colonel to give the boys a rabbit hunt.

"I am something of a sportsman, but I must confess that anything like that hunt I have never seen before or since. The regiments were marched out to regular positions ments were marched out to regular positions selected by the commander and marked by the guides on the sides of various old fields where the sedge-grass grew waist high. These were intersected by small streams over which the alders grew dense and dark. Here they stacked arms. The wood and roads were picketed and a guerd was set over the guns. The field officers remained mounted, and one in each regiment was required to remain with the arms. Then each man was directed to many of them of the character of those which have become known in our literate as "Christmas Stories." Ido not remember now that there were may take the merolence resounted, but there were may be nevolence resounted, but there were may be nevolence resounted, but there were may be now the there were now the strings of the property o —de Confederates, yer kno'—dey thout hit war best ter git up and git outer dar an' let Marse Morgin kno' all 'bout it, yer kno'. But I wasn't able ter march myself dat night. Leastways I got lost in dat dar swamp, an' nex' mornin' blundered inter de camp an' got tuk pris'ner. I did. So I 'cluded ter change sides, an' been wukkin' fer myself ebber since. Dat was de sort ob Chris'mas fer me. Marse Cap'n—sho'ly was."

"But I never heard of that before," said the Captain in surprise.

change sides, an' been wukkin' fer myself ebber since. Dat was de sort ob Chris'mas fer me. Marse Cap'n—sho'ly was."

"But I never heard of that before," said the Captain in surprise.

"'Spect not," said the porter with a shrug. "Hit all so, do', an' I went back to Nashville with you uns. an' stayed dar till mos' de s'render, an' den come Norf."

"Why didn't you tell us apout those rebs?"

"Wal, ye see, in de fus' place nobody ax me, an' in ne nex' place, I been roun' dese camps long nuff to know dat de best ting a nigger do on either side was t'jes keep his mouf shut jez ez much ez he could. Dat's de way I did."

The porter's philosophy was greeted with a round of approving laughter, after which the Captain, as I shall call him hereafter, who had gained confidence by this interruption and confirmation of his narrative, continued: "Well, gentlemen, I suppose you think I am a good while coming to the point of my story, but I will not detain you much longer. It happened that there was in our regiment, the — Indiana, a Loutenant who for no special reason was a kind of butt for the sport of all the line officers. His name was Bridges—a provocation to ridicule in itself. He was a good fellow in his way, but his way was not a popular one. He was not far from forty years of age, rather below the medium height, with a squeaky voice and fussy manner—not a bit of dignity nor power of command in him. He was quite well educated, however, and was a successful man of business in the little town whera he lived. He had married a young wife just before the regiment left for the field, and I think the inclination to talk about her was the chief reason of our combining to make fun of him. He knew he was being laughed at, but kept on doing his duty fairly well—very well, I should say, under the circumstances. He was no coward, but his young wife made him wish to live, and caused him to be more careful of his health and safety, I think, than he otherwise would have been. He had taken a sort of fancy to me, thinking, perhaps, that I forgotten any duty and turned in on a bed of cedar boughs, with a saddle for a pillow. I was awakened by some one shaking me and calling my name in excited tones. I was on my feet in an instant and rushed to the opening in the tent to see what was the matter. I ing in the tent to see what was the matter. It was a beautiful night—the moon nearly at the full, the air crisp, cool and clear, the camp silent save for the tread of the sentinels and the occasional pawing of the horses pick-eted in their places. The camp-fires were burning low and I could see the rows of men sleeping on their arms near their impromptu Christmas decorations.

"What's the matter, Bridges?" I asked impatiently. He came out into the moonlight and I could see that his face was pinched and drawn with agony. He looked ten years older than when I bade him goodnight a few hours before. I was really alarmed, and asked anxiously if he were ill.
"'Oh I am well anough he anywared with "'Oh, I am well enough,' he answered with more composure than I had given him credit for, 'but I have had such a horrible dream—for, 'but I have had such a horrible dream—no, not a dream, a vision.'

"How I kept from laughing in his face I do not know. But indeed his agony was pitiful and I felt almost awed by it. At least I felt a sort of sympathy for him, though indeed it was an odd idea that a soldier should stand there in the moonlight, his face showing pale through the fingers clasped over it, and his voice husky with excitement, because he had had a bad dream. I remember thinking that many of the poor fellows wrapped in their blankets there might very well have troubled visions if they were clairvoyant in their sleep. However, I mastered the inclination both to laugh and to sneer, and opening a little flask of brandy which I kept for special sleep. However, I mastered the inclination both to laugh and to sneer, and opening a little flask of brandy which I kept for special occasions, I poured some into a tin cup, and holding it to his lips told him to drink. His teeth fairly chattered as he drank it off. I gave him a camp-stool, took another myself and waited for him to recover his equanimity. After a while he said:

and waited for him to recover his equanimity. After a while he said:

"'You are very kind. Lieutenant. It is silly no doubt. I don't believe I am a coward, but it was so real—so terribly real. I wouldn't mind it myself—I really would not." he repeated protestingly. 'I don't wish to die, but I would never think of being troubled about it in this way, if it was not for my wife. You don't know her, Lieutenant. It would kill her. You don't know how her life is bound up in mine. It's not any common case. I've been father and lover and husband and savior—all to the poor girl; took her out of the street—no, not out of the street, out of the very shadow of death, when she was but a child, reared, educated and loved her all the time with the double love of father and husband. I would never have married her though—never, if she had not insisted upon it before I came away. She was sure I would be hurt—killed perhaps, and she wanted to be as near to me as she could come. I knew it was foolish. I ought not to have married her. Why, she's only seventeen and I'm forty—a graybeard, too. That's what the boys call me sometimes. could come. I knew it was foolish. I ought not to have married her. Why, she's only seventeen and I'm forty—a graybeard, too. That's what the boys call me sometimes, and they are right. I was not worthy of her—never can be, but I love her, and she worships me. It would make you ashamed if you could see her letters to me. I am the pinnacle of the world's life and worth in her eyes. I know I don't deserve it, and I ought not to have let her get such a toolish idea. In truth, I did nothing to encourage it—but—but I loved her, and I could not dispel her illusion—could I, now?'

"But what has this to do with your dream, man?"

man?"

'Ah, yes—my dream,' cried he with a shudder. 'Well, it wasn't a dream, you see, at all, for I wasn't asleep. I had been lying down looking up at the stars and thinking of Emily—wondering how she was getting on, you know, and fearing she was unhappy. The truth is, I don't think of much else. I'm an old fool, I suppose, but I simply can't help it. Remember, I've carried her in my heart ever since she was four years old, Lieutenant, and it has been the one joy of my life to think and do for her. I'm not a coward nor neglectful of my duty. but how can I help it if her image is before my eyes all the time? Well, I grew so anxious about her man?

that I got up and sat by the fire with my back against the stump of a sapling the boys had cut down for wood. Presently, while I sat there looking at the fire and at the shadows in the woods in front of our camp it all disappeared, and instead of it I saw a town perched on the side of a hill, with a wide street that ran down to a river which swept around the whole so that the town stood on a promontory jutting out into the river, which was crossed by a railroad bridge below the town, while the hill that rose above it had a pine grove and some sort of an earthwork running along its crest.'

"'Did you ever see the place before?' I asked in surprise. I was sure he had not.

"'That's one of the queer things about it,' he answered. 'I am sure I never saw such a place before, and yet I seemed to know every foot of the ground. There had been a battle there. I knew that—I don't know how—we had been in possession of the railroad—the enemy had driven us back through the town and fired the bridge. We made a stand here and there. It don't seem as if it was our men exactly, and yet it must have been, 'he said simply. 'I wouldn't have been fighting with any other force, would I?'

"You wouldn't be likely to be,' I said, 'though, of course, that is possible.'

"Yes, of course,' he assented. 'Well, as I said, there were some graves along the side of the hill just below the edge of the pines and inside the line of works. By the way, there was a fort or something of that kind on the point above the town, I seemed to be looking on at all this,' said he. 'There were no soldiers and no camps around, but just those red graves on the hillside with rough headboards at each. Everything was just as still and quiet as death. The sun was shining brightly and the grass was fresh and green as it is in the early spring sometimes.

"While I was wondering at this I saw a woman standing at one of the graves. She was alone in the world. Somehow, I was not surprised, but I wondered where I was and why she was wearing a widow's weeds.'

"All at on

J. S. Bridges, Lieut, — Ind. Vols, Killed in action at —ville, Ky. 26th of Dec., 186—

"'I did not get the date, because her figure hid a part of the inscription from me. I saw enough though. I knew I had been killed in battle and that Emily was crazed with grief at her bereavement. Remember, I did not dream this, but saw it. I know the vision will be fulfilled, too. I don't mind about myself. I didn't then. I didn't mind having died. I think I was rather glad to be dead, except for Emily—I couldn't bear that she should suffer—that her young life should be destroyed, her brain crazed with sorfow!

be destroyed, her brain crazed with sorrow!'
"My God, Bridges,' said I, 'how did you learn where we are going?'
"'Where we are going?' he asked in surprise

" 'Yes, indeed, you have described with'the "Yes, indeed, you have described with the utmost minuteness the place we are expected to reach and attack on the morning of the 26th—the day after to-morrow—at daybreak."
"The words were out of my mouth before I realized that I had betrayed the secret of the expedition. I knew it was safe enough with Bridges, but I was mortified that I should, even for a moment, have forgotten my trust.

my trust.

"The poor fellow's face became a shade paler, I thought, but he did not show any further sign of fear."

"Well," he said, quietly enough, after a moment's silence, 'I knew it was my fate, though I had no idea we were going to turn off our course and strike towards Mumfords-ville."

ville.'
"'And who said we were?' I asked, anxious to regain the ground lost by my previous hasty answer.
"'That is the name I saw on the headboard,' he answered. 'Poor Emily!' he added, with a sigh.
"I confessed that was our destination, but tried to cheer him up by telling him there was little likelihood of a fight, and if there should be one little chance that he would be in it. I even offered to have him detailed for special service to keep him out of the thickspecial service to keep him out of the thick-est of it. He shook his head.
"'I couldn't do it,'he said. 'Besides it would do no good. One can't avoid what is should be one little chance that he would be in it. I even offered to have him detailed for special service to keep him out of the thickest of it. He shook his head.

"I couldn't do it,' he said. 'Besides it would do no good. One can't savoid what is decreed.'

"I trembled as I saw how thoroughly he was possessed of that fatalistic idea I had known so many soldiers to entertain, and which I had never known to fail in its forecasting of the end. I was no longer inclined to laugh at him. His querulousness had departed and he was dead to all thought of himself as if the stroke of fate had siredy fallen. He only repeated his wife's name softly.

"Poor Emily! Poor Emily!"

"He told me he had made his will and named me one of his executors. His wife was the sole heir and also executrix. He die not suppose I could act new—he had not looked for the end quite so soon—but he wanted me associated with and to looked for the end quite so soon—but he wanted me associated with a state of the commission. I thought it then I thought that was the part that I could do and was glad to do. I shouldn't have come at all, but Emily got the notion that I was going to do so and talked about it so that I saw it would gratify her pride. So I came. I don't think I was intended for a soldier, though I am willing to do what I can. If they had made a quartermaster now—that is in my line. But I was not going to lobby for it, and beeddes I don't think Emily would have liked it as well.

"All this talk in his quiet, pathetic voice was too much for me. The idea of being an executor too was only less terrible to me than of being an executor too was only less terrible to me than of being an executor had heaved and the wise but once, when she came to bid him good by as we started for the field. She was a beautiful woman. I wondered then how she came to be approached to make a succeive of the county, had never seen his wife but once, when she came to be done to make a succeive of the county had never seen his wife but once, when she came to be good n widow in the administration of her husbands estate threw me into a perspiration. I think I had an idea that there was no way out of such a duty if it were once devolved on me. So I begged him to excuse me, but to no purpose. He said his wife bad the will and he

So I begged him to excuse me, but to no purpose. He said his wife had the will and he would rest easier if he knew I was interested in her welfare. Why he should I could not imagine. I was nothing but a schoolboy and not a very bright one either.

"In trying to find a way out of this it occurred to me that an officer with a little detail of men was to be sent back in the morning. I urged him to take this, but he declined. Determined to get out of what seemed to me a desperate scrape, I finally asked him outright why he did not resign, take this detail back to the city and leave the service. I thought I might help my friend Edson by persuading him to this course as well as save the man's life and benefit the service at the same time. I did not hesitate to tell Bridges what he already knew, that he was not fitted for his place, and it would be a patriotic duty on his part.

" He hesitated chiefly I am sure on account "He hesitated chiefly I am sure on account of his wife. At the same time his love for her and the conviction he had of her helplessness inclined him to follow my counsel. The result was that before sunrise his resignation was made out, approved by the Colonel and he was on his way back to Nashville in command of the squad detailed to take in a few sick, some wagons and despatches. A week afterwards he was relieved from duty and went back to private life." week afterwards he was relieved from duty and went back to private life."

"Did you have a hard fight at Mumfords-ville?" asked one of the listeners.

"We carried it by assault at daybreak of the 36th," said the Captain, with a smile, "without firing a shot or losing a man, capturing one mule very far gone with the glanders, which was all the trace the enemy had left, they having departed twelve hours be-fore we arrived."

"So he wouldn't have been hurt after all,"

"So he wouldn't have been hurt after all," said one.

"He must have thought that vision of his was a tremendous sell," said another.

"Poor Emily!" exclaimed another, in lugubrious tones.

This sally brought the laugh that the quaint ending of the narrative seemed to deserve, and there was a movement to retire, when, curious to know the feeling of the man after this ludicrous anti-climax, I asked:

"What ever became of the fellow?"

"That is the strangest part of the matter,

"What ever became of the fellow?"

"That is the strangest part of the matter, gentlemen," said the Captain soberly. He had not joined in the laugh, and every one settled back in his place to wait for the sequel. "In February, 1894, I was ordered home on recruiting service. The train was delayed at Mumfordsville for repairs to the track, which had lately been disturbed by bushwackers. Hearing that we were likely to be delayed all day, I strolled into the little town and remembering Bridgee's dream after a time, sauntered up to the crest of the hill where he had read his doom. As I did so I could but remember how accurately he had could but remember how accurately he had described what he had never seen. Queer

SHE TURNED A WILD, STARTLED LOOK UPON ME. enough there were even some fresh graves on the crest where he had located his own. As the crest where he had located his own. As I came nearer I saw a woman in widow's weeds kneeling by one of them. I do not know why, but my curiosity was piqued to see her face and I drew near at the risk of intruding on her grief. I was within a few yards when the noise of my footsteps came to her ears and she turned a wild, startled look upon me, and cast herself prone upon the grave, clasping the head board wildly and protesting vehemently against being removed. As she did so, I saw the head board previously concealed by her form. On it was distinctly traced:

J. S. Bridges.

J. S. Bridges. Lieut., — Ind. Vots. Killed in action at Mumfordsville, Ky., Dec. 28, 1868.

Every one drew a long breath at this an-

Every one drew a long breath at this announcement.

"And the woman?" asked one.

"His wife. She had come for his body and had become insane with grief. A family in the town had kindly cared for her."

"How did it come about?"

"Well, the story of his resignation leaked out and the ludicrousness of the subsequent events was too much for the people at home. He was jeered and taunted until even his young wife hung her head in shame at the thought of having married a coward. Bridges stood it for a while, then went and joined a regiment which was being recruited in the next county as a private. In a fight which occurred just after it was mustered into service he showed such desperate valor and withal such soldierly capacity that he was promoted to his former rank, to date from that day. By mere accident he was at Mumfordsville when Morgan made his attack on the garrison demoralized by their Christmas festivities, and in trying to rally the troops in the early morning was killed on the very spot he had described so well a year before."

Nobody spoke for some minutes. Then one, interpreting the look in all our eyes, shrugged his shoulders and said: "Strange, wasn't it?"

I was thinking of the young wife, and almost involuntarily asked:

the person of that time another person, not one's self, not the person of this time. It is so difficult to say: Now, now, now is the time to leave off! because the person whom "Now" andresses is one's self, and experiences the whole hitterness of the remunciation. And for this reason we mayone-eve that usually the time for carrying the good resolve into effect is seldom this moment or this day, but is always among the to-morrows; and thus uncounted good resolutions are made in any part of the last year, the time for tacir budding into action being always left for the first day of the new year.

A Faithful Wife.

(From the Chicago Tribune.)
"I shall use the $25 you gave me to spend for hristmas, John," said the wife, tenderly, to the young man who had recently become the partner of her joys and sharer of her sorrows, "in the purchase of something that will constantly remind me of your generosity. I shall have the p rtraits of my first three automate equivalent framed and hun, in our sitting-room."

John to ked at the ceiting with a rapt, dreamy gaze, and in the deep, cloquent silence that ensued the wallpaper could be distinctly heard adhering to the wall.

A Powerful Agent.

[From the Bin Aumton Republican.]

Too much water," says an authority on the subject, will remove the strongest growth of bair, 's True, every word of it. Water will in time destroy even the locks of a canal. Only a Small Percentage.

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press.]
There are in existence 189,000 copies of "the etter that never came." Any married woman knows that this is a small proportion of those that were never matled.

Riker's Compound Dandellon Pills the best LIVER FILLS you can take. No Mercury, no Aloss, no Jaiap. Hox 300 pills), 15c. . A RAFE, sure cure for coughs and colds, ADAMSON'S BOTANIO BALSAM, EINSMAN, 20th st., 4th ste. CHRISTMAS IN THE HOSPITAL

BY A PAUPER INMATE.

Merry Christmas! Here? Hold down, with prostrate, aching body, for many weary months, a bed sack in a hospital for the destitute, until, with spinal column worn organization; the knots of matted straw are grinding away at the under side of your breast-bone, and, of course, you're "merry !"

In this yet dim light of early Christmas morn, see that ghost of fever and famine combined stretched on the next cot; eyes glazed, claw-fingers picking at the torn blankets. A merry sight, isn't it? Grim Death chuckles; it's his meat.

Listen to that fellow on the opposite bed in a strait-jacket, raving prayers and curses. A smashed skull, strychnine and whiskey make him

"Little Billy." all warped and twisted. He oes to the Alms bouse next week; no place else on earth for him. A merry thought in his Christ-Dry pread and alon coffee breakfast; then the loctors. Sawbones, sr., is a pleasant man. He does his best for a fellow. Sawbones, jr., mental weight six ounces to the pound, wears eyeglasses, pimples, Waterbury watch and an air of supernatural wiedom. He has calculated on making his first post-mortem on your cadaver and highly disapproves of your presumption in still living. The patients are dosed liberally and experimentally in the interests of science and education. Sucking surgeons and 'prentice barbers must practise on somebody, you know.

It's cold in the ward—cold with the zero frigidity of proverblai charity, and you snuggle under the bed covers, while those patients out and about shuffle around and try to warm up by exercise. A jolly crowd this.

Visitors arrive; wives looking as ill and even more miserable than the men whom they visit; bables in arms of course, and often a tottering chick hanging to the skirts. These make lively family parties, awfully lively. The shadow of unpaid rent entivens them.

"Chipper" young girls come to see "the old or some "feller." These are high-hatted, bedecked with cheap gauds and profuse of fluffy bangs; but their footwear and general rig are as dilapidated as Jake Sharp's reputation. They chew gum and munch andy, and are gay with the giggies of semi-idlocy. Tough lads are here also, in a degree subdued by the restrictions agains oudness, profanity and indiscriminate distribution of tobacco-juice. They "don't see no Christma

There is one dear, pale, white-haired little woman, with a smile that makes your heart sick. She hurries to a cot in the corner. "Pappy" is there, her long-afflicted, patient husband, whom she loves to-day with the same proud tenderness that filled her heart long ago, when both were young and strong and happy. "Pappy" was rich once, and she had diamonds and carriages. Well, the bank cashier has the wealth now in Canada. The frail wife tries to wear a Caristmas face, tries to joke a little, and from her pocket brings a few ittle dainties which she starved herself to buy for him, and he makes a brave effort to be bright one more. But soon they are silent; hand in hand they remain in the quiet of content or despair. It God in his mercy would this moment call these win souls into the world beyond, surely ther theirs would be a Merry Christmas.

But its dinner-time ; now for the feast. Outsiders must get outside. Two big kettles are carried in, the turkey has been roasted by stewing, and it is carved and served with a big tin dipper. These are a peculiar breed of turkeys; thirty-eight men are furnished, yet no part of turkey anatomy appears save wings and legs. This is a peculiarity charity turkeys. But there is picnty to satisfy those who cat and those who gorge, and no ato s left. In a week or two, may be, you'll see to morrow's paper with a list of the many good things provided for your feast. You'll see all you didn't get—in the paper.

Of course there has been praying and sermonize

ing, but pudding and sauce would have caught ou better ; and there are other incidents, but in the riotous festivities of the day now can one recal

The dishes are washed, the floor swept : the nurse comes in and serves pills or concoctions at around as a relish; and then the fight against cold. and the growing and the misery, the sickness of body, mind and soul, that is the lot of every common day, take possession of each, and Christmas -for the pauper patient-is over.

Favorite Books of Popular Preachers. See the Sunday WORLD. Three cents.

Crumpled Rose Leaves.

[From Puck.]
Dry Goods Clerk (to fellow clerk)—Timmy. remember I told you of a desperate firtation had with a beautiful girl at Saratoga, when I was on my weation?

Timmy—Yes, chappie.
Dry Goods Clerk—She was in here to-day, and bought some dreas goods.

Timmy—What did she have to say?
Dry Goods Clerk—She saked me if the goods would wash; that's all.

Cold Waves

Are predicted with reliable accuracy and people liable to the pains and aches of rheamatism dread every change to damp or stormy weather. Although we do not claim Hood's Karsaparills to be a positive specific for rheuma-tism, the remarkable curse it has effected show that it may be taken for rheumatism with reasonable certainty of benefit. Its action in neutralizing the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of rheumatism, constitutes the secret of the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla in curing this complaint. If you suffer from rheumatism, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a fair trial, we believe it will do you good. complaint. If you suffer from rheumatism, give Hood's Sarssparilla a fair trial; we believe it will do you good.
"I suffered a long time with rheumatism in my left arm and shoulder, my blood being in a very low condition. I was advised to use Hood's Sarssparilla, and I did so with great success. Since I have been taking it I have not been troubled with rheumatism, and my blood is in a better condition." MRS. M. MOUNT, 303 Nostrand ue, Brookirn, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla fold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass. 100 Doses One Dollar

AMUSEMENTS AMERICAN INSTITUTE 2d and 3d Aves, and 63d and 64th Sts. COMMENCING SATURDAY DECEMBER 24TH, A WINTER CIRCUS.

Frank A. Robbins' New Shows. Two Rings and a Singe-A Zoo ogical Carden-Museum of Carlos ton-Startling Aerial Performances-Famous Riders
-Daring Gymnasts, and a Regi-ment of towns, Trick Animals and Educated beasts, to please the cultdren.

Fifty Beautiful Lady Artists, Handseme Heraes, Monkeys, Musical And Dancing Elephants, Ring Performances Daily at 2 and 8 P. M. Doors Open One Hour before for all the ather wonders, RESERVED SEATS IN BOXES, 81.

All Seats Reserved One Week in Advance, The HE Mark 1 No. ES. epecially devoted to Ladies and Children.

TANDARD THEATRE. BROADWAY & SJD ST.
COMMENCING AT 8 O'CLOCK,
(MAND PROJECTION
Under the management of Frank W. Sanger,
PAUL KAUY IK. OH ANARCHY,
BY Steele Mackeys.
HOLIDAY MATINAKS, Dec. 26 & Jan. 2.
Seats now on sale.

WALLACK'S.
Evenings at 8, 15, Matines Saturday at 2.15,
FORGET-MENOT.
Characters by Mosars. Occord Tearle, Harry Edwards,
J. W. Pigott, Mms. Fonist, Miss Neits Outon and Miss
Bose Coghlian. CHRIST MAS MATINESK Dec. 26.

1 Dreparation a New Comedy Entitled
1 THE FASHION."

A CHILD'S LIFE SAVED

When six months old the left hand of our little grand-child began to swell and had every appearance of a large bell. We poulticed it, but all to no purpose. About five months after it became a running sore. Seen other seres formed. He then had two of them on each hand, and as months after it became a running sors. Soon other sorse formed. He then had two of them on each hand, and as his blood became more and more impure it took less time for them to break out. A sore came on the chin, beneath the under lip, which was very offensive. His head was one solid scab, discharging a great deal. This was his condition at twenty-two months old, when I undertook the care of him, his mother having died when he was a little more than a year old, of consumption (scorodia of course). He could walk a little, but could not get up if he fell down, and could not move when in bed, having no use of his hands. I immediately commenced with the CUTICURA SOAP freely, and when he had taken one bottle of the CUTICURA RESOLVENT, his head was completely cured, and he was improved in every way. We were very much encouraged, and continued the use of the remedies for a year and a half. One sore after snother healed, a bony matter forming in each one of these five deep ones just before healing, which would finally grow looss and were taken out; then they would heal rapidly. One of these ugly bone formations I preserved. After taking a dozen, and a half bottles he was completely cured, and is now, at the age of six years, a strong and healthy child. The sears on his hands must always remain; his hands are strong, though we cope fearth he was completely cured, and he had a search of the county of the county of the search of the county of the search of his hands must always remain; his hands are strong, though we cope fearth he would not received. use them. All that physicians did for him did him no good. All who saw the child before using the CUTICULA. REMEDIES and see the child now consider it a wonderful cure. If the above facts are of any use to you you are as ilberty to use them. Mrs. K. S. DRIGGS,
May 9, 1865. 612 East Clay st., Bloomington, Ill.
The child was really in a worse condition than he sppeared to his grandmother, who, being with him every day, became accustomed to the disease.

MAGGIE HOPPING, MAGGIE HOPPING.

CUTICURA, the great skin cure, and CUTICURA SOAP prepared from it, externally, and CUTICURA ESCAPENT, the new blood purifier, internally, are a positive cure for every form of skin and blood disease from pumples to scroula.

Sold sreywhere. Price, CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, 81. Preparet by the POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL Co., Boston, Mass.

57 Send for "How to cure Skin Diseases," 64 pages, 50 illustrations and 10) testimonials.

BABY'S Skin and Soalp preserved and beautified by AMUSEMENTS.

NOW OPEN.

PHILIPPOTEAUX. TRUE TO NATURE AND HISTORY IN ALL RESPECTS.

OPEN DAY AND EVENING. 4TH AVE. AND 19TH ST.,

UNION SQUARE.

UNION SQUARE THEATRE.

FOURTH MONTH. and CRANE. BRONSON HOWARD GREAT COMEDY. THE HENRIETTA.

Extra Matiness Monday, Dec. 20, and Monday, Jan. 2. 199th performance Saturday Matines, Dec. 31. Elaborate Sauvenirs.

Elaborate Souvenirs.

METROPOLITAN OPERA-HOUSE.
HOF MANN CONCRETS.
Under the personal direction of Mr. HENRY E. ABBRY.
TUEBDAY, Dec. 27, at 3 o'clock. SATURDAY,
Dec. 31, at 8.15 o'clock.
JOSEPH HOFMANN,
accompanied by MMR. HEI ENK. HANTREITER,
Prima Ponna Contrainto: Theodore Bjerksten, Tenor, Sig.
De Anna, Barticos: Miss Nettic Carpenter, Miss. Saccon,
Harpist, Sig. R. Sapuo, Accompanist, and Adolpharpist, Sig. R. Sapuo, Accompanied, and Adolpharpist, Sig. R. Sapuo, Saccondations of the Contraints of the Contr H. R. JACOBS'S 3D AVE. THEATRE

CORNER SIST ST., AND SD AVE.

RESERVED SEATS, HALLEN and HARTS

20c. FIRST PRIZE IDEALS. SECURE SEATS IN ADVANCE Dec. 26-FUN ON THE BRISTOL

ARRIGAN'S PARK THEATRE.

ARRIGAN'S PARK THEATRE.

M. W. HALLY

CONTINUOUS SUCCESS OF

MR. EDWARD HARRIGAN'S

GREAT AND ORIGINAL

GREAT AND ORIGINAL

DAVE BRAHAM and his POPULAR ORCHESTRA.

GRAND HOLDAY MATINEE SATURDAY.

GRAND HOLDAY MATINEE MONDAY, DEC. 26.

FORN MUSEE, 23D ST., BET. 5TH & 6TH AVES. New Groups. New Paintings. New Attractions.

ERDELYI NACZI

and his HUNGARIAN ORCHESTRA.

Concerts from 3 to 5 and 8 to 11.

Admission to all, 30 conts; children 35 cents.

AJEB—The Hystifying Uness Automaton.

NIBLO'S. LAST TWO PERFORMANCES, Reserved seats, Orchestra Circle and Balcony, 50c.

SHE.

Last Matines, To-day at 2.

Monday, Doc. 26, Christmas Matines,
The Great Sporting Drama,
"A RUN OF LUCK."

DOCKSTADER'S MINSTREIS
29th st. and Broadway. Nightly, 8.50. Prodigy Planisk
Every Song, Act and Specialty new this week,
Toys and Candles gives way very performance.
Grand Christmas Matinee Monday.

RAND OPERA-HOUSE.

Recurred seals, orchestra, circle and balcony, 50e, Wednesday MRN. LANGTRY Saturday Matines. "ASIN A LOOKING-GLASS." Matines. Next week NAT. C. GOODWIN Next Sunday PROF. CROMWELLY Ultristmas subject will be "MERRIE ENGLAND."

Next Sunday.

Madison Square Theatre.

Madison Square Theatre.

Marie Mr. A. M. Palmer.

Marie Mr. A. M. Palmer.

EVENINGS AT N..0.

SATURDAY MATINEES.

MONDAY Dec. 26.

Holiday Matiness Services and Saturdays.

FOITIVELY LAST WERK OF DEN MAN THOMPSON.

In THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

NEXT WEEK—THE HANLONS, in LE VOYAGE EN SUISSE.

STEINWAY HALL.

SUNDAY NIGHT.

FOPULAR -UNDAY CONCERTS.

22 FIRST-CLASS AG(1878.

TO-NIGHT AT S. 10. MATINEE SATURDAY.

MR. RICHARD MANSVELD.

IN HIS OWN COMEDY, MONSIEUR.

NEXT WEEK—THE SUNCLAND M. HYDR.

PLOUD MR. RICHARD MANSVELD.

NEXT WEEK—THE ALLY'S SOC.

TO-NIGHT AT S. 10. MATINEE SATURDAY.

MR. RICHARD MANSVELD.

NEXT WEEK—THE ALLY MN MR. John Steiner.

TO-NIGHT AT S. 10. MATINEE SATURDAY.

MR. RICHARD MANSVELD.

NEXT WEEK—THE ALLY AND MR. HYDR.

PLIOU RICE'S BURLESQUE COMPANT.

BLIOU OPERA-HOUSE.
HOUSE.
THE CORSAIR.
MATINEE SATURDAY AND XMAS. POOLE'S THEATRE, 8th st., bet. B'way and 4th ave.
MATINEES—Monday, Wednesday, Thursday, Saturday,
TANKN FROM LIFE.
Next Week—"ONE OF THE BEAVEST."

STAR THEATRE. "THE FLORENCES."

MR. AND MRS. FLORENCE.

To-might, Convisions Matines and Night,

DOMBEY A SON.

Tuesday, Dec. 27—THE MIGHTY DOLLAR, TONY PASTOR'S THEATER. SPLENDID SHOW.

GOOD RESERVED SEATS, 25 CENTS. A RMORY HALL VAUDRVILLE THEATRE.

108 and 160 Hester at.

International Buriesque and Comedy Company.

LYCEUM THEATRS.

Begins at 8.18.

Matineo Sat. and Mon. A CADEMY OF MUNIC.

SEATS NOW ON SALE
FOR NOW ON SALE
FOR NOW NOTH AND LAWRENCE BARRETT.

"JULIUS CESAR," MONDAY, DEC. 26.